A New Way to Go

How are we supporting disabled students at this time and what can we learn from the challenges of the pandemic to better support students with disabilities in the future? Focused on leading organizational change, this live online program explores how to create a nimble organization that balances longer term innovation with today's performance—experimentation with financial stability. It is more imperative than ever that we give everyone an equal opportunity to access higher education, and strive to remove all barriers to student success. Using the Internet and smartphones to facilitate rides enables those seeking shared rides to tap a broader pool of potential matches.

Improving student success in higher education

This evolution must be systemic, consistent, and scalable; therefore, school teachers, college professors, administrators, researchers, and policy makers are expected to innovate the theory and practice of teaching and learning, as well as all other aspects of this complex organization to ensure quality preparation of all students to life and work.

4 innovations from exceptional community colleges

He is also keen on promoting social and geographic mobility in the student body, and is a keen advocate of study abroad programmes, having established numerous partnerships with universities around the world. It incorporates detailed professional learning community guides and a reflection tool to support evaluation. Partners are able to check if their award includes staff salaries by referring to the financial breakdown they submitted in their successful application for an award.

Access and Equity

Please contact Esther Dudley, Head of Events and Engagement for more information: If you want to stay up to date with our events, news, and publications, you can. Implementers in turn have to be creative and motivated to do their job; they must also have freedom to innovate in the implementation, security on the job to take risks, and control of what they are doing. Thus, making learning more time and cost efficient offers a promising venue for further innovations.

A New Way to Go

Her role involves driving and coordinating inclusive practice in the Open University, supporting staff to be accessible and inclusive by design, and championing disabled student needs at different echelons of the University. Could these developments — the rapid spread of mobile, Internet-connected technologies, the emergence of social networking, and the recent decline in driving — be related? With the infrastructure in place, not only could GSU uncover the greatest obstacles to student success, and launch programs to address them, it could also continually test new approaches. We may have an empirical inkling and some hunches, but we still lack any fundamental insights.

Creating Connection

In drawing too much attention to technology innovations, we may neglect teachers and learners in the process. She has written extensively on a wide range of public policy and management issues, from health and human services reform to the future of transportation and the transformation of higher education.
