The hierarchical priors on the indicator and scale parameter are developed to model the characteristics of outlier.

Liouville type theorems for some fractional elliptic problems

His research interests include nonlinear and adaptive control theory and their applications, more recently network-based control, distributed optimization and distributed machine learning, with applications to power systems and robotics. He is currently a professor at the College of Information Science and Engineering, Shandong Normal University.

Liouville type theorems for some fractional elliptic problems

Cyber attacks could affect the operations of CPS and cause physical damages before any indication.

Robust observer

In this work, we put forth a general topology optimization framework to design hyperelastic structures with anisotropic fiber reinforcements under large deformations.

Adaptive delay compensation for consensus control under switching topologies by observer

The research line in this direction is mainly to apply predictor-based design Artstein, 1982, Kwon and Pearson, 1980, Manitius and Olbrot, 1979, Smith, 1959 for a single dynamic system with pure delays to consensus control. The very nature of these approaches demands specifying, or at least approximating, the statistical interdependencies between individual entities in the network.
