Making A Spectacle of Yourself

The use of the seer stone should be of no particular surprise or concern to any Latter-day Saint who accepts that Joseph received a set of sacred stones that were consecrated for the purpose of receiving revelation and translation. The term Urim and Thummim referred to any instrument used for the purpose of translation or the receipt of revelation. According to Calvin, the more we search for God through Natural Revelation, the more elusive God becomes, as exemplified by the following quotation from this very section of the Institutes I.

There is, however, no evidence to confirm that this is the case other than the fact that Joseph was allowed to use the stone for this purpose. The next question is: Why did Joseph switch between translating instruments? We know that at some point during the translation process that Oliver Cowdery desired to translate.

John Calvin's Spectacles of Scripture

Shortly, after a MRI scan this morning — to find if the twelve weeks of chemo therapy for my breast cancer, had shrunk the cancer — I was crossing a road when my legs gave way all of a sudden, and I fell headlong in the mud in the street. Joseph eventually realized that his ability to communicate with the Lord was not dependent upon a sacred object, but was instead a function of his faith and humility.

A Spectacle to Angels and Men!

Scott discussed this in the April 2007 General Conference. Another possible explanation is that the Nephite interpreters were never returned to Joseph, and that he was expected to continue the translation using his own seer stone.
