Foxe says, 8 ' During this Hurly-burly among the Popish rebels in Cornwall and Devonshire, the like commotion at the same time by such like Popish priests as Homes and his fellows began to gender in the parts of Oxford and Buckingham, but that was soon appeased by the Lord Gray. Do not the doctors know, who thus prescribe, That air's the liquor which our lungs imbibe? Although no record of club discussions survives, these dinners in an inn such as The George at Melksham or at the house of a member were no doubt occasions for conviviality enlivened by political news and diocesan gossip. A small proportion of parishes also continued to celebrate communions at feasts such as Easter, although this practice was discouraged.
