Rationalization, working conditions and living standards in postwar Japanese coalmining communities

Under the naya system workers were not directly employed by the mining company, but by subcontractors nayagashira, each of whom was in charge of a certain number of 102 FEMALE LABOUR IN THE JAPANESE COAL MINING INDUSTRY miners. However, the process of rationalization that was arguably one of the main driving forces behind these developments was far from unambiguous. Dongguang district was east of Datong Dajie but south of the old city and west of the Yitong River.
