Kōsei na shakai to wa : kyōiku, jendā, esunishiti no shiten kara

The first and second waves of reform created universal education in Japan, laying the foundations for the third wave of reforms, whose objective was to offer a diverse range of universal educational services. .

Imin, kyōiku, shakai hendō : Yōroppa to Ōsutoraria no imin mondai to kyōiku seisaku / Jī...

Only these two turning points in the history of Japanese education are seen to be more radical than the changes brought on by the third wave. The second wave was the introduction of democratic values and civic instruction following World War II.
