Still Falls The Rain Poem by Dame Edith Louisa Sitwell

She is depicted in the simplest of poses, her head turned slightly towards the viewer, her eyes meeting directly; her placid expression combines self-possession with the vulnerability of her youth and perhaps a little anxiety, as she dons the exotic clothing no doubt provided by the artist to assist the magic transformation of the child into the fashionable woman. He concluded that many cases could be explained by human trickery conscious or unconscious and. Board edges rubbed, sound binding.
