Since the focus of our analysis is on the case where income from capital invested abroad cannot be fully taxed, we assume that the pattern of capital flows is such that the country is a capital exporter i.

Seike, Atsushi 1954

Recognizing that tax structure is only one of many contributors to growth, they nonetheless note that the model does capture the resource reallocation effects of shifting from import substitution to export promotion, and conclude that less than 10 percent of growth, or 1 percentage point of the growth rate, was contributed by the tax structure. If the tax rate is not the same in all countries, however, the marginal product of capital is also not the same in all countries. Tsai 1991 pointed out that, to determine whether the demand-side determinants in Taiwan were relatively more important than those in other countries, all variables should be expressed in relative terms.
