Crisis in the Anglican Communion: recent history and potential outcomes.

Today it is accepted that Colenso was largely right. As of 19 April 2012, regarding the Covenant have been announced. On 30 June 2014, the General Synod adopted a resolution affirming openness to considering a covenant but without mention of the covenant currently on offer.

The Anglican Communion Covenant cannot be adequately understood — or assessed — apart from this wider ecclesial discernment for self-understanding. As expected, a will be presented that seeks to postpone a decision on the Covenant until at least 2016. Chances are that at our Synod any discussion of the Covenant will be almost literally buried under earthquake related items on the agenda .:

The Anglican Communion: A Brief History Lesson

Allowing a diversity of opinion allows us to explore new possibilities. That 11 out of 39 provinces have adopted the Covenant — a little over a quarter of the churches of the Communion — means that it is not dead at all. It has indeed failed to capture the ecclesiological imagination of the Anglican Communion.
