Vanished French Impressionists, 2: Eugène Boudin

Boudin painted at Camaret, in Brittany, each year between 1870 and 1873. These he used to paint a more traditionally finished oil painting, which was shown in the Paris Salon the following year, where it was praised by Baudelaire. The third possibility is this, Camaret, Le Toulinguet 1872, which is now in a private collection.

August 1898 in Deauville war ein französischer Maler, Vorläufer des und einer der ersten Freilichtmaler. Eugène Boudin 1824—1898, Lady in White on the Beach at Trouville 1869, oil on board, 55. Später gab er in seinen Werken auch das Leben der Menschen wieder, wobei er jedoch nie ganz auf Naturdarstellungen verzichtete.

Maybe one day someone will publish a full account of them, with ample illustrations. Born at Honfleur, Boudin was the son of a harbor pilot, and at age 10 the young boy worked on a steamboat that ran between Le Havre and Honfleur.

Once he started to visit the French Mediterranean coast, he painted many of its views, including The Bay of Fourmis 1892. Als Sohn eines Hafenlotsen arbeitete Boudin bereits im Alter von zehn Jahren als Schiffsjunge auf einer dampfgetriebenen Fähre zwischen Le Havre und Honfleur. Eugène Boudin lernte einige Kunstmaler aus der Gegend kennen und begann, ihre Bilder in seinem Laden auszustellen.

References — good collection of maritimes, and a long biography and appreciation There does not appear to be a good book on Boudin in print. At the First Impressionist Exhibition, which opened on 15 April 1874, Eugène Boudin is listed as showing six items, although in fact these covered three oil paintings, six pastels, and four watercolours: thirteen works in all. His skies never disappoint, and his honest, fresh, painterly work is undervalued.

By 1847, Boudin had made his way to Paris, where he started to study paintings in museums and galleries.
