Invisible sojourners (2000 edition)

For a discourse on heterogeneous differences, is a groundbreaking text; for the first time, a larger public became aware of a growing group of younger Africans for whom Selasi coined the term Afropolitans, who are affluent, highly educated, and highly skilled and who do not lay claim to just one African home country and possibly one additional diasporic country but consider themselves global, transnational Africans. Immigration and urban education in the new millennium: The diversity and the challenges. Collection of twenty-six essays; includes topics such as reasons for departures, current debates about the brain drain, relationships with the Old African Diaspora, identity questions, discussions about race and racism in diasporic spaces, geographical dispersion in North America and western Europe, and the influence of the new media on identity formations.
