The American Spectator magazine goes to war with London

The United States would go on to win important victories at New Orleans, Baltimore and Lake Champlain, but the last of its troops left Canada in 1814 after evacuating and blowing up Fort Erie. They were initially inspired by Sir 1835—1910, a Scottish landscape painter associated with Impressionism. Richardson also trained the most notable Irish portraitist of the period, who enjoyed social and financial success in London despite his clear limitations as an artist.
