Tom Seaver and why sometimes you really should meet your heroes

Seaver had signed with the Atlanta Braves, but his contract was ruled illegal by former Commissioner William Eckert because USC had already started its season.

Tom Seaver Dies: Hall Of Fame Pitcher, 300 Game Winner And Greatest NY Met Was 75

National Baseball Hall of Famer Tom Seaver, who pitched for the Cincinnati Reds from 1977 to 1982, died in his sleep from complications of Lewy body dementia and COVID-19. He returned to the Mets in 1983, and then spent parts of three seasons with the Chicago White Sox, for whom he won his milestone 300th game in 1985. The HOF says Seaver's death was more specifically caused by complications from Lewy body dementia and COVID-19.

Tom Seaver's wife, Nancy, outraged Mets never built statue of her husband

Seaver now Sara Zaske was born on September 16, 1972; their second daughter Anne Elizabeth Seaver now Anne Buckle was born on October 29, 1975. He told me about something funny his wife, Nancy, had said, about how his grapes had come in that summer, about how my son had to learn to slap that front foot down if he wanted to throw a great slider. His son turned to baseball and pitched for the Fresno American Legion team as well as the Fresno High baseball team; he was also a high scorer on the basketball team.
