Uganda Christian University School of Law Constitutional History Course

The traditional leaders have contributed tremendously to the unity, happiness and development of their various peoples in Uganda. It is, therefore, in order that elements of the infrastructure should radiate from Kampala.

What Buganda gained from new constitution

Nor does it mean getting rid of District MPs, LCs leaders or other local government officials. How were the Federal Regions Administered? Under the 1962 arrangement, federal status was only granted to the Kingdom states of Uganda and even these kingdoms had varying federal rights.

Buganda's Proposals on Constitutional Reform in Uganda

If you persist in sending friends of Buganda away, they will surely go away eventually, but Buganda will have lost the contribution those very friends would have made towards the development of your area. It was under these Agreements that the very diverse and culturally different peoples in Uganda came together as one nation known as Uganda. In the case of non-Kingdom states of Uganda, the system of Administration divided the nation into large district groups, with each district large enough to encompass whole ethnic groups with the above characteristics.

Power Politics in Buganda

Several Central Government institutions such as State Houses and Lodges, Military Barracks, Research Centres, airports are situated in various areas in Buganda and the rest of Uganda. Federalism lends stability to the central government: Previously, a coup plotter, who only had to take over Radio Uganda in order to take over government, would now find it very difficult to convince each one of the forty FM stations to carry his message.

Uganda

It was only after Buganda refused to have any other Kabaka but Mutesa II that Obote decided in May 1967 over a year later , to abolish the Federal System and to rule the whole country from the centre. Fortunately, when we were still students in the 1960s, we started a progressive movement with people like Eriya Kategaya and it formed the nucleus of the National Resistance Movement.
