Hai Yan Jiang: Benjamin Herzweig Esq. The counterfeit goods were manufactured in China and smuggled into the United States through containers fraudulently associated with legitimate importers, with false and fraudulent shipping paperwork playing a critical role in the smuggling scheme. Then the money less the laundering fee was transferred from in Fujian, China, to a bank in Guangzhou, China, where it was subsequently withdrawn and physically transported via courier to a bank in Hong Kong.

After importation, the counterfeit goods were delivered to warehouses, and distributed throughout New York, New Jersey, and elsewhere. Zheng was therefore instrumental in each of the money laundering transactions — he received the cash from other conspirators and caused it to be transferred overseas in furtherance of the laundering process.
