The Sublime: A Reader in British Eighteenth

Burke takes a step further and proposes that at the basis of terror - and thus of the sublime - is our sense of our mortality. Is the sublime a stylistic convention of visual representation? As to the love of our country, or rather universal benevolence, which like the sun every where diffuses itself, who can have any idea of it, without taking into his view large societies, numberless nations, all mankind reaching from pole to pole, from the rising to the setting sun? We often confess the sublime as we do the deity; it fills and dilates our soul without being able to penetrate into its nature, and define its essence.
