Sir Robert Muldoon and David Lange The 1984 Leaders' Debate : newzealand

I can smell the uranium on it as you lean towards me. Lange took various measures to deal with the economic problems he had inherited from the previous government.

Prime Ministers of New Zealand since 1856

Lange practised law in and Auckland for some years, often giving legal representation to the most dispossessed members of Auckland society — he assisted the and, by extension, the Pacific Island community to disseminate legal rights information and legal aid during the '70s. In the 1975 General Election Muldoon humiliated the Labour government in a campaign founded on rampant populism.

Industrial policy could be genuinely participatory, developed with local communities, using gender-responsive budgeting. A vacancy for a list MP whether created as a result of a list MP succeeding in a by-election, or through other reasons is filled by the next person on the party's list set at the last general election who is willing to take the vacancy up.

Obituary: Sir Robert Muldoon

They warned him the foreign exchange could not open for trading the next day without an immediate devaluation. I remember Muldoon himself as a kind of cartoon.

Recovering from our Muldoon

They were responses to a collective view that New Zealand's post war leaders and governmental architecture put too high a priority on high taxes, big infrastructure, trade and economic controls and 'Big Government'. If, between general elections, an electorate seat becomes vacant, a by-election is generally held.

Best of New Zealand TV, 1980s: Goodnight Kiwi, Lotto, Miss New Zealand blunder

The next day, Sir Robert rang David Lange, asking for a joint press conference announcing they would not devalue.

Ngā Taonga Sound Archives: Election campaign songs of the 1980

McLay expected Sir Robert to follow established convention and obey any instructions he might be given during the few days it would take Labour to form a new government. Under the New Zealand Nuclear-Free Zone, Disarmament and Arms Control Act 1987, the territorial sea, land, and airspace of New Zealand became nuclear-free zones. In 1980 Lange and a group consisting of Douglas, Bassett, and tried to remove Rowling as leader of the Labour Party.
