Precarious Work in Ontario: trends and resources

Introduction Economic pressures related to globalization and technological advances have led to changes in the labour market and the nature of employment. Ontario is already taking steps to build a high-quality, accessible and affordable early years and child care system that supports choice and flexibility for parents and promotes healthy development for children.

Chapter III

The percentage of women 25 years and over with a university degree has converged to that of men, and more women ages 15 to 24 are enrolled in university today 55 per cent than men 45 per cent. As shows, workers in non-standard employment are considerably less likely to have access to employer-provided benefits. Important Ontario Wine Industry Statistics 1.

Provinces and territories of Canada

This figure was 29 per cent in 2015 and has been roughly flat at that level since 1997, with the exception of a brief spike in 2009 and 2010. Overall, Ontario ranked fifth highest on the composite well-being measure, relatively stronger than its economic growth performance.

Global Employment Trends

These are mostly in service sectors and tend to be either high-skill jobs involving problem-solving abilities or lower-skilled, non-routine manual jobs.

There has also been a move away from defined benefit to defined contribution pension plans, particularly in the private sector.

Chapter III

As shown in , the International Monetary Fund projects that growth in trade will slightly outpace world GDP growth over the next five years. This categorization is done at the two-digit occupational level. Skill levels B and C saw very small real wage increases and skill level D saw a small decrease.

Where can I find labour market information?

Many older workers who retire will later return to the labour force to non-standard jobs.

Chapter III

Work has been changing due to various related pressures on product and labour markets and on employers, as noted in the previous section. Younger workers can expect to start off in limited-term contracts or in internships sometimes unpaid , or self-employment, and can expect to change careers often working for different employers.
