Abberley Neighbourhood Plan

By the Silurian a great number of sea creatures had evolved hard external skeletons — trilobites, corals, crinoids, brachiopods and mollusca.

Planning

This tramway was cut to transport coal from the mine at the top of the hill down to the loading bay at the level of the railway line.

Walking The Malverns

The theory was investigated by the and used as background material by in his novel The Remains of an Altar 2006. The rocks that underlie Dog Hill Wood all formed during the Silurian Period.

The Geopark Way

These faults have disrupted the north-south alignment of the Hills, displacing some of the Hills to the west. In the liner notes for J.
