Messerschmitt BF

Atglen, PA: Schiffer Books, 2000. In his brief comment on his own tipped-in color chart, Ullmann admits that, although the intention was to match specified colors, there nevertheless were many variations in shade, differences which had to be accepted then and now.

Bf 109

The Bf109F also spearheaded the German invasion of the Soviet Union. Though it was on the losing side, the Messerschmitt Bf109 was probably the most important fighter of World War II. Not only did it shoot down far more aircraft than any other type in history, but it also, initially backed up by no other fighter except the big twin-engine Bf110, took on the air forces of Spain, Poland, Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, Yugoslavia and Greece and eliminated them as fighting forces. One of the limitations of the earlier Bf 109Es was their short range of 660 km 410 mi and limited endurance, as the design was originally conceived as a short-range interceptor.

Messerschmitt Bf 109 variants

It continued to serve in this role until it was taken out of service completely, later in 1940. Held by the AWM, Canberra.

Bf 109

First appearing in 1941, the Bf-109F was lined up for the German invasion of Soviet Russia.
