15 Lovely Poems about the Beauty Of Nature

I can't wait, to go to the zoo. To My Father A giant pine, magnificent and old Stood staunch against the sky and all around Shed beauty, grace and power. Soon it will be fifteen years He was old he will have fallen into his eyes I took my eyes A long way to the calenders Room after room asking how shall I live One of the ends is made of streets One man processions carry through it Empty bottles their Images of hope It was offered to me by name Once once and once In the same city I was born Asking what shall I say He will have fallen into his mouth Men think they are better than grass I return to his voice rising like a forkful of hay He was old he is not real nothing is real Nor the noise of death drawing water We are the echo of the future On the door it says what to do to survive But we were not born to survive Only to live Persons tend to become arrogant and turn atheist when attain so much wealth and fame.
