Lichtenstein Izsák

Woodbridge, 1958 ; Az Áldott Orvos. He also stressed the bad physical effects of factory employment and overcrowded, insanitary housing, the growth of drunkenness and immorality in the expanding industrial towns, and the evil consequences of the employment of women outside the home on family life and morals. He argued that, under the existing conditions, wages were held down to subsistence level, so that the benefits of higher productivity were denied to the workers, and that accordingly the share of the workers in the total product tended to fall continually as output increased.

World Missionary Conference, 1910.

Missions and Japanese Churches, almost without exception, honestly desire to avoid overlapping and interference, but under the present system there is no representative body to advise or arbitrate on such problems. In: Világügyelő: Tanulmányok Hoppál Mihály 70. They were there when the Revolution of 1848 broke out.
