These often show proposed new developments, that were not always realised.

Economy of Scotland

Economic policy was limited by rudimentary understanding of economic matters and government efforts largely revolved around the creation of monopolies in the trade of various types of goods. The closing decade of the seventeenth century saw the generally favourable economic conditions that had dominated since the Restoration come to an end. Of these, 21,207,000 were in England, 2,345,000 in Scotland, 1,274,000 in Wales, and 649,000 in Northern Ireland.
