Dextrins and Mouthfeel

Carafoam Carapils outside the US is different than Briess Carapils and is akin to chit malt, high in protein and under-modified. Current evidence indicates that LOX-1 is mainly responsible for the formation of trans-2-nonenal during brewing¹⁷.

Dextrins and Mouthfeel

Application of genetic engineering to improving malt quality factors such as cell wall degradation, protein modification, starch hydrolysis and flavour stability, is discussed.

However, at 125°F, most of the starting limit dextrinase remained, which suggest that if you conduct a protein rest 113-138°F you would likely have a good temperature range for limit dextrinase activity. Proceedings of the 25th Congress of the European Brewery Convention, Brussels, 1995, 93. Structural analysis of wort dextrins by means of Beta-amylases and the debranching enzymes pullanase.
