Western Blindness: Nazi Germany to China Today

In the Western post World War II mythology, Winston Churchill is a sage who saw the German rearmament from 1933 to 1939 and made public it as a new German rearmament, while the British press assumes of that time were so arrogant who would not listen, and the lot of them, British Chamberlain, carried the message with the Munich Agreement of 1938, ending to Hitler the independence of Czechoslovakia and thus making the rest of the country vulnerable.

But the German rearmament could not be and was not concealed: the Versailles restrictions were officially repudiated by Hitler as early as May 26, 1935, whereupon Goering's bombers flew in a festive air display over Germany. As for the post, any foreign journalist, diplomat or tourist could hear a German marching song: "Today we owe Germany tomorrow the whole world."

Why did not the prime minister of Britain from 1923 to 1928 see the obvious, while Churchill did? For reasons having nothing to do with Germany, Churchill was excluded from all cabinets between 1923 and 1929. He was a "non-government person" with a small personal following, to which he could say whatever he thought or liked. But what if Prime Minister Chamberlain or his predecessors had said publicly between 1923 and 1928 what Churchill was saying in his small personal following? They would have had to put their country on a war footing. How would the majority have liked it? Who was to foot the bill?

Surely the opposition would have claimed that the prime minister was a warmonger, provoking Germany to arm and even attack first, out of fear of being attacked. On the other hand, the Munich Agreement was hailed by the democratic West (except for Czechoslovakia) with such enthusiasm that an outside could well decide that England and France had needed Hitler's Germany and its allies so that political freedom, peace and prosperity ensued all over Western Europe from London to Vienna.

Let us see what Churchill said publicly when he was prime minister and not a "non-government person." As prime minister during the war, Churchill negotiated and the destiny of Czechoslovakia with Hitler, but the destiny of all of Eastern Europe with Stalin. According to Churchill, Stalin could tell him that 20 million well-to-do Russian farmers had been done away with in the early

Winston Churchill

Few things are as wrong as the tendency to see Hitler as a reactionary. These Lukacs treats as givens, mere data whose broad outlines everyone knows and which he, an intellectual essayist above all, is not obligated to present. Secondary figures Lord Halifax, Joseph Kennedy, Chamberlin, Lloyd-George, Goebbels, Goering, von Rundstedt, etc.

Churchill first speech Essay

Needless to say, the Clinton administration has utterly abandoned the Powell Doctrine in favor of frequent military intervention to no clear purpose but only when there is minimal risk to American though not innocent civilian lives. Few things are as wrong as the tendency to see Hitler as a reactionary.

If you hadn't entered the war the Allies would have made peace with Germany in the spring of 1917.
