Keeping the peace along the Suez Canal

Though the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty declared Egypt as a sovereign state in 1936, Britain only agreed to withdraw its troops from Egypt in 1956.

How did they construct the Suez Canal?

As Professor Finer describes the situation, Spaak, tried to influence Lodge, and succeeded momentarily in doing so, to such effect that Lodge, also influenced by the other members of the U. In the summer of 1942 the axis was poised to break through.

Egypt's Suez Canal: A ray of light amid the economic gloom

Ten countries contributed a total of 6,000 peacekeepers, commanded by Canadian Major-General E. These attacks took the form of orchestrated demonstrations, riots, attacks on servicemen and their families and the sabotage of facilities often condoned by or with the active participation of the Egyptian Police.

Where is the Suez Canal?

While the canal as such was the property of the Egyptian government, European shareholders, mostly French and British, owned the which operated it until July 1956, when President nationalized it—an event which led to the of October—November 1956. This historic shortcut reduced the maritime route between Europe and India by 7,000 kilometers, linking what was popularly understood as Mediterranean civilization to the Far East. They needed to move large amounts of raw materials to Britain, where their industries were, and move the products to where the fighting was.
