Does withholding information about illegal activities compromise the integrity of the discipline? How do people learn and experience their culture? Change As the previous example about globalization and Coca-Cola demonstrates, our world is dynamic and constantly changing. For example, anthropologists also have a responsibility to the public, including the obligation to disseminate the findings of their research-even when certain findings might lower public opinion about a group of people. For example, Scottish people often celebrate their identity with bagpipes and kilts made from tartans, plaid textiles that comprise stripes of different widths and colors that identify the wearers' clans.
