Grass

The future population of the world: What can we assume today? The countries of the developing or 'Third World' in our society are attracting increasing attention. Through East-West Center affiliation, awardees become part of a growing network of students and alumni forging the shape and substance of the world's most vibrant region. This is an analysis of trends in urbanization in Tunisia since 1936 and is based on official data.

Globalism and Regionalism

Whether growing Chinese power will be exercised in the absence of internal and external constraints remains debatable at this point.

Population Index

Their goal of military modernization, together with those of small and medium-sized states in the region, has made them parts of an emerging multipolar structure of power in the Asia Pacific, particularly when economic power is thrown into the equation. Since virtually all states of the world are members of the UN, the function of external security is now essentially moot, but that of providing peace among members of the organization certainly is not.

Grass

The decline of undemocratic regimes and the emergence of new, reform-oriented leadership in many Asian countries are certainly encouraging signs to those who believe in the liberalist future. An attempt to establish a typology of urbanization trends in Tunisia. The classic case of such a regional order is 19th century Europe.
