Hunt (L79)

I also noticed their maximum range which seems almost comparable to any modern destroyer who are huge by comparison to those tiddlers and should thus have more power plants and greater range surely? Being a primarily AAW destroyer, it is essential to have this capability. They also had a Welin breech block with Vickers mechanism. Their career was very active and they showed all their versatility and left a memorable memory to their crews.

Hunt type 3 escort destroyers (Aldenhurst class, 1941)

A single warship of this class can obliterate the entire North Korean surface, sub-surface fleet and pound targets deep within their territory without breaking a sweat.

Top 10 Most Powerful Destroyers In The World

The remaining units were untouched, except for the possibility of replacing one of their banks of torpedo tubes with a 47 mm rapid-fire cannon, the addition of 33 ASM grenades and two to four 20 mm AA guns. Battle of North Cape, 1943: This battle which saw the Scharnhorst sunk by a squadron composed of HMS Savage, Saumarez, Scorpion, HNoMS Stord, HMS Opportune, Virago, Musketeer and Matchless.

Hunt Class Destroyer Hunt Typ III, L'Arsenal 350 19

The Hunt Class Destroyers in the RN at 1939 were just 1,000-1,300 tons. Another lack, but which was still rare at the time, the absence of a radar. Its numerous attempts afterwards, reconstructions and new buildings in 1936 and later in the war, even more massive, were not to be eclipsed by the extraordinary capacity of American industry.
