Step 4: Making a Record One of the most important steps in the discovery process is keeping good records regarding disclosures. This requirement, as many other of the provisions the Fifth Amendment, has been applied to the states through the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. When the discoverable information contained in an email or other communication is fully memorialized elsewhere, such as in a report of interview or other documents, then the disclosure of the report of interview or other documents will ordinarily satisfy the disclosure obligation.
