Toward the end of the 19th century, steel production largely replaced iron production. Scotland produced some of the most significant British architects of the 18th century, including: 1676—1729 , 1682—1754 , 1732—94 , 1721—92 and 1728—92 and 1723—96 , who all created work that to some degree looked to classical models.
