Max Bruch (1838)

Bruch had the reputation of being a difficult man—he often said vicious things about people who had helped him in his career—and no doubt his personality problems contributed to his life of a rolling stone. He was buried, next to his wife who had died on 26 August the previous year, at the at Berlin-.

Max Bruch (1838)

Max and his sister Mathilde had their first piano lessons from their mother, and Mathilde, who lived with Bruch at various stages of his peripatetic life, was later on friendly terms with many of the great composers of the era. The farm belonged to an attorney and notary named Neissen, who lived there with his unmarried sister.
