Labour conditions in Ancient Egypt are described by Herodotus in his account, derived from earlier authorities, of the building of the Great Pyramid. Both mainstream Islamists and their secular opponents generally agree that Egypt should be governed by a democratic political system, with a government chosen through free and fair elections. Craftsmen often worked in workshops with other artisans of the same type.

Egypt: Culture

They don't wander aimlessly, but return annually to various locations in their territory where the land and water can sustain them for the season. It is the main Christian church in Egypt.
