The Cantos Project

Translations In Pound's Fenollosa translations, unlike previous American translators of Chinese poetry, who tended to work with strict metrical and stanzaic patterns, Pound created free verse translations. There are articles by Günter Blöcker, Buddhadeva Bose, Thomas Cole, William Carlos Williams, Brigit Patmore, and Brian Soper, and a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation interview with Pound by Canadian poet Louis Dudek.

A Lume Spento

These richly ornamental passages exploit linguistic density and sound-patterning to produce effects quite removed from Laforguian logopoeia as Pound had defined it in 1918. The Short Sharp Life of T. Eliot, James Joyce, Robert Frost, Ernest Hemingway, and Marianne Moore.

A Lume Spento

He saw the Vorticist movement as finished and doubted his own future as a poet. Sullivan and the writer Guy Davenport, but it was the association with Mullins and Kasper that stood out.
