The country is now gradually becoming more populated with white inhabitants, the consequences of which, with regard to the aborigines, were probably not contemplated when the settlement of the island was first decided on, nor could their desultory mode of living be known, or any numerical idea be formed of their population. Donaldson will be supported by all the force that can be brought forward by the Police Magistrates of Launceston and Norfolk Plains, in addition to that which can be contributed by the settlers in those districts. There were scarcely any roads or bridges, and nearly the whole colony except Hobart and Launceston, was unknown unless to a few bushmen looking after wild cattle; the country was greatly disturbed at that time by the bushrangers and subsequently by the natives.
