A member of the society named Isler surveyed large swaths of the eastern West Virginia mountains for a Washington-based firm, and reported back to the society on the richness of the country. It is an important contribution to the history of immigration to the United States and to the study of cultural diversity in the Appalachian region. Kübler, Bruno Bachmann, and August Rüedy, who on July 4, 1927, founded the Swiss American

Historical Society in Chicago.
