It would have been '46, '47, '48. She quotes from an editorial on 'Local Color' that Stevens wrote in 1900 while an undergraduate at Harvard and president of The Harvard Advocate, proposing that Stevens' interest in overcoming locality can be traced back to those days. New York: Random House, 1945.

Wallace Stevens

Critical Essays on Wallace Stevens. I stood at the gate in the station, and when he came through I didn't have any trouble spotting him. He is certainly the quintessential American poet of the twentieth century, a doubting idealist who invested slight subjects the weather, often with oracular gravitas, and grand ones death, frequently with capering humor.
