I listened, and it was 'Hark, the herald angels sing? Last scene of all, George Hudson, alone and deserted on a platform, vainly trying to stop the train which was leaving him in the lurch. All work was done in a hurry and safety procedures were minimal. It must be placed to his credit that even if, after the manner of conquerors, he caused a great deal of misery, he did some really good work in the cause of railway extension, notably as regards the , of which he was the first Chairman.
