Folk Women and Indirection in Morrison, Ní Dhuibhne, Hurston, and Lavin

Focusing on the lineage of pivotal African American and Irish women writers, the author argues that these authors often employ strategies of indirection, via folkloric expression, when exploring unpopular topics. Focusing on the lineage of pivotal African American and Irish women writers, Jacqueline Fulmer argues that these authors often employ strategies of indirection, via folkloric expression, when exploring unpopular topics. Apart from being an enlightening work on feminist fiction, rhetoric, folklore, otherness and censorship, this book also stands as a significant contribution to the study of African American women writers and Irish women writers on the basis of comparative literature.

In both African American and Irish communities, women have often been encouraged to suppress the inequities they experience as women in the service of the larger community's civil rights struggle. Fulmer traces the line of descent from Mary Lavin to Éilís Ní Dhubhne and from Zora Neale Hurston to Toni Morrison, showing how obstacles to free expression, though varying from those Lavin and Hurston faced, are still encountered by Morrison and Ní Dhuibhne.
