A Ruined Fortress?: Neoliberal Hegemony and Transformation in Europe

The founding of the EEC coincided with the emergence of three different theoretical discourses that mark the terrain of mainstream theoretical approaches to European Integration: federalism, functionalism, and inter-governmental cooperation. Prior to 1992 involvement in these states was limited, with transnational corporations organised in sub contracting relations with East European firms rather than favouring investing directly, and engaging mostly in sectors that allowed for an easy exit Bohle, 2002: 165 — 176. It is interesting that this idea was introduced with the slugging economic situation of Portugal in mind after the introduction of the Euro.
