New Orleans

The fleet set sail toward Mobile Bay, Alabama on February 4, 1815 with all of the British troops aboard, and the army captured at the mouth of Mobile Bay on February 12. Since the population in most of the adjacent parishes is quite small, these figures indicate the general trend of white movement to the suburbs typical of most major U. Parliament had ratified the treaty, but Congress and the President did not ratify it until mid-February.

Almost universal blame was assigned to Colonel Mullins of the 44th Regiment which was detailed to carry fascines and ladders to the front with which to cross the ditch and scale the parapet, as the soldiers fought their way to the American breastwork. Admiral Cochrane believed that the veteran British soldiers would easily destroy Jackson's ramshackle army, and he allegedly said that, if the army did not do it, his sailors would, and the meeting settled the method and place of the attack.

Pamphlets, songs, newspaper editorials, speeches, and entire plays on the battle drove home the point and glorified Jackson's heroic image. The engagement was small in scale compared to other battles of 1815, such as the , but it was important for the meaning that Americans applied to it, Andrew Jackson in particular.
