The Gallic Wars by Julius Caesar: Book IV

Chapter 39 While he is tarrying a few days at Vesontio, on account of corn and provisions; from the inquiries of our men and the reports of the Gauls and traders who asserted that the Germans were men of huge stature, of incredible valor and practice in arms - that oftentimes they, on encountering them, could not bear even their countenance, and the fierceness of their eyes - so great a panic on a sudden seized the whole army, as to discompose the minds and spirits of all in no slight degree. Neque quisquam agri modum certum aut fines habet proprios; sed magistratus ac principes in annos singulos gentibus cognationibusque hominum, qui una coierunt, quantum et quo loco visum est agri attribuunt atque anno post alio transire cogunt.

Those tribes that for political reasons could not ally with the Aedui had allied themselves with the Remi; thus the Aedui became the most powerful state and the Remi, the second most powerful.

De bello Gallico (1842 edition)

The Romans built siege engines, and Caesar waited for an opportunity to attack the heavily fortified oppidum. Concern grew in Rome that the Germanic tribes would fill in the lands vacated by the Helvetii.

Chapter 21 Being on the same day informed by his scouts, that the enemy had encamped at the foot of a mountain eight miles from his own camp; he sent persons to ascertain what the nature of the mountain was, and of what kind the ascent on every side. Fabius, his lieutenant, and M.

Commentarii de Bello Gallico

The Veneti also had sails, whereas the Romans relied on oarsmen. Vbi, qui ante obsides dederant atque in ditionem venerant, purgandi sui causa ad eum legatos mittunt, qui doceant neque auxilia ex sua civitate in Treveros missa neque ab se fidem laesam petunt atque orant ut sibi parcat, ne communi odio Germanorum innocentes pro nocentibus poenas pendant; si amplius obsidum vellet, dare pollicentur. Sextius faints, after receiving many wounds; he is with difficulty saved, drawn away by the hands of the soldiers.
