Commentary on Selected Letters of Cicero

Believe that I have learnt nothing from experience, nothing from , if you don't shortly see the time of our government an object of regret. I am resolved, however, to disown the obligation rather than pay up for you. Further remarks upon these points and upon similar ones will be found in the commentary.

Writings of Cicero

I feel sure you will be sorry for it. In these letters I will be , you ; the rest shall be in riddles. In the next place, by way of consolation, I persuaded myself that the hope of a distribution of land is now all centred on the territory.

Meanwhile convince yourself of this, that both in the interests of the Republic which has ever been most precious to me, and in the interests of our mutual affection, I have nothing more at heart than your position in the State. I could wish, or rather ardently desire, that you were here: then I should not want advice or consolation. He said that the only reason he would go to Rome would be to complain about the campaign in Spain that Caesar was organizing against Pompey.

Did Cicero and Caesar's political interference and motivations bring about the transformation of the Roman Republic?

I regretted your absence not only as the supporter of my policy, but as the spectator also of my admirable fighting.
