Social Work with Older People

Problems that would previously have caused the automatic admission of an older person into long-stay care — hip fractures, strokes, heart disease, etc. Again, given the fact that social services departments are responsible for large numbers of assessments under community care, this standard is clearly central to social workers see Chapter 7. While there are rational arguments in favour of both proposals, the fact remains that they are both driven by economic calculations.

Social Work with Older People

While there are age-related changes, these do not constitute a major obstacle to the ability to function effectively in later life. As part of this program, the ABA Center on Children and the Law provides trainings, free resources, works one-on-one with legal and social services professionals - from judges to children's attorneys and social services personnel - who are involved in the foster care community to make their community a better and safer place for LGBTQ foster kids.

The content of this section is a necessarily condensed version of material that can be found in standard texts on gerontology and social gerontology see, for example, Bond et al. It certainly associated social work with one aspect of its potential role, while implicitly drawing attention away from others. The outpatient departments of voluntary hospitals were being deluged by many people whose primary need was not medical; consequently, it was argued by the COS that the application of systematic principles of social work would help to resolve this problem Bosanquet, 1914.

The chapter focuses particularly on the impact of community care in the 1990s and discusses in depth the policy developments advanced by the New Labour government from 1997 onwards. The range of problems that can be created by this process include one of the largest causes of death in industrialised societies, coronary heart disease.

Social Work with Older People

Large numbers of people were accommodated in residential and nursing home care, irrespective of need, at the public expense Lewis and Glennerster, 1996. The fact that there has been a squeeze on the numbers of people entering residential and nursing home care, combined with the fees paid by local authorities, has created major problems for some care providers that affect both residential and home care. There were large numbers of converted properties in use alongside purpose-built residential care homes of variable quality.
