In closing he demanded an immediate investigation of his complaint, as he had heard that the surveyor was about to leave for England. In view of subsequent events, however, it may be presumed that he continued to nurse grudges, and that he cherished the hope of winning a seat in the Assembly at the next election, which was to take place in 1860. The votaries of taste and fashion will spend their days and nights poring over the morbid pages of sensual and fictitious narrative ; yet if their God was to ask them if they had read the book which He sent them from heaven, where would they look? Well, you understand that our jaws definitely dropped.
