Cased treasures...

In his pursuit of the English crown, Harald Hardrada died in the Battle of Stamford Bridge, opposing the Anglo-Saxon king Harold Godwinson. The list might be prolonged, but enough has been said to show to what a pitch of refinement the art of wood-carving had reached thousands of years before the birth of.

The allied skills simultaneously highlight the construction and carving skills of master-craftsmen and architects; Kandyan wooden architecture is extremely rich in detailing, show-casing a range of wood-carving, much of which represents a remarkable combination of creativity and skill in manipulating the material. Middle ages were also confined to a limited number of stories artists could convey in visual form, which were mainly decided upon at religious gatherings where dogmas were closely followed, and prescriptions about what is allowed and what is not guided much of the creative output of the period. At a later stage the furniture made became an integration of Sinhalese decorative elements and Dutch styles of furniture-making.
