Lockdown responses, from farm workers to sex workers to civil society

Most recently, the DLF has supported the student and worker uprisings in the universities that took place in October 2015. The basic rights of workers—including for a decent wage and quality housing—can be realized only through their independent organisation in a political struggle for socialism against the ANC, COSATU and the capitalist profit system that they defend. Farm dwellers must contend with difficult living and working conditions.

statements could impact heavily on investor confidence. Unions such as CSAAWU could also use the strategy of recruiting workers and community members in the townships first, where the major battles during the strikes were centred around, and then use this as a spring board to recruit amongst workers that live on the farms. The labourers were and are descendants of Europeans and various African groups, including slaves, farmers, sailors, prostitutes, Malaysians, and Khoi-San.

Lockdown responses, from farm workers to sex workers to civil society

The movement arose from two sources: one conservative and protective of the old guilds and craftsmen resisting the hordes of newly proletarianised, deskilled workers; the other a militant offshoot of the 19th century radical Chartist movement. So what has been their performance? We cannot allow so-called normality to prevail. Permanent farmworkers on all the farms, including on those belonging to Sexwale and Rupert, earn slightly more.
