On the one hand, certain writers, such as Tertullian and pseudo-Ambrose, following the principle of the Jewish law, admit this ground of repudiation to the advantage of the man, but not to that of the woman; while others, like Epiphanius, maintain the equal right of the sexes in this regard. This, however, may be explained by the circumstance that the passage door opens outwards, and towards the left, and so would conceal the body behind it.
