The party cadres were responsible for basic social control, and the work-team movement was a layer of the control mechanism for the targeted supervision of the party organization. The malfunction of these decision-making and approval-rendering organizations does not necessarily mean that party work broke down completely; however, it does imply that the party no longer acts as a collective decision-making Military-First Politics and Changes in Party-Military Relations 95 and approval-rendering body. Following his instructions, the Political Commission was established in the Defense Ministry, and a political division was installed in every unit.

The four subsystems categorized here are the political, ideological, economic, and intellectual-cultural subsystems. Sin Kyōenghwan, a former cadre on South Korean affairs at the WPK, testifies that there was a significant degree of personal ties between Kim Jong Il and the former guerrilla leaders who had committed themselves to a lifetime loyalty to Kim Il Sung.
