Economic history of Spain

The end of the war did not improve Spain's plight because of subsequent global shortages of raw materials, and peacetime industrial products. The years from 1951 to 1956 were marked by much economic progress, but the reforms of the period were implemented irregularly, and were poorly coordinated. General strikes were common and the economy stagnated.

Nutrition in the Colonial Empire

The Roman municipal and provincial governorships continued but the imperial superstructure of diocese and prefecture was of course completely gone as there was no need for it: these had existed to coordinate imperial defense and provide uniform administrative oversight, and symbolized as nothing else, except the professional army, the presence of the Roman.
